

Kawasaki S-3 400

I told her
it would save money.

My wife
could never understand why
I wanted
a motorcycle.

She felt it would be a waste of money, and besides there were plenty of other ways to have fun. Then the price of gas started to skyrocket and I had the excuse I needed. So one day I stopped in at my Kawasaki dealer and looked at street bikes. When he showed me the S-3 400 triple I knew that was the one. Sporty looks, plenty of power and a good price were the things that sold me. But selling my wife was another story. First I told her it would save money on gas because I'd use it for work. Then I talked about the front disc brake, the big headlight and signal lights and even threw in the safety factor of the brake wear indicator. In the end she agreed on the basis that the money we saved would go into the food budget. So now I zip down to work each day on my S-3 and come home to better meals than we've had in a long time. And on the weekends I go looking for the most winding roads I can find. Those upswept mufflers come in handy on sharp curves. And that triple cylinder engine really sings on open stretches. The cost of living got me my motorcycle. And I've never lived so well.

The reliable S-3 engine is rubber mounted for smoother performance and less vibration.

Those upswept mufflers do more than look great. They make banking curves and turning corners a lot easier.
